

Ball Chain & Money Game: Putting some fun into finances

Fights with your spouse are never easy, but evidence shows that arguments over money can be particularly distressing. A 2011 study by Jeffrey Dew of Utah State University found that married couples who disagreed about money once a week were twice as likely to divorce as those who differed less than once a month. This is partly because money arguments encompass more than just finances. Money doesn't just represent money; it represents love, power, control, self-esteem, freedom. Money decisions are such personal decisions, which is why they can lead to nasty fights. When it comes to money, many couples are blinded by their own views on spending and saving, and often can't see or understand their partners' perspective. We always think our own way of looking at money is the best, and it creates a tug-and-pull inside the relationship. Communication is key to resolving money issues. Gaining a better understanding of your partner's financial habits will enable you to prevent arguments with your spouse over money or at least quell them before they escalate. This is why we created The Ball Chain & Money Game (BCMG). BCMG has been developed by a couple who faced the series of challenges listed above and more. The game was developed in trying to take the sting out of money issues between couples and use a little bit of friendly competition into a serious subject. BCMG will not only help out your financial situation but more importantly, will add a little bit of fun, laughter and even romance into your relationship. Friendly competition is healthy for the relationship if it motivates and encourages communication, keeping in mind this is just a game and the word friendly.
