

Three Lectures: Delivered in Chicago, St. Patricks Day, 1880; By Request of the Irish-American Council of Chicago, in Aid of the Irish Relief Fund (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Three Lectures: Delivered in Chicago, St. Patricks Day, 1880; By Request of the Irish-American Council of Chicago, in Aid of the Irish Relief Fund In the fulfilment of a promise made in the preface to The Case of Ireland Stated, viz: should circumstances justify it, that work would be followed by a series of other books of such sterling material as will enable not only Irishmen in America, but also those of the manor born to learn something of a People and a Land, who, though victims of the most adverse circumstances for centuries, have nevertheless filled no small space in the worlds history. It is deeply to be regretted that more of such material, as is herewith presented, has not been preserved in permanent form. The cause is not very difficult to discover: Eloquence is the purest native gem Ireland possesses - it is what Chief Baron Woulfe said public opinion in Ireland should be, Racy of the Soil. It loses much by transplanting from its native tongue, yet will compare favorably with the best in any language. Its striking peculiarities are that it is spontaneous and extemporaneous, so that to preserve and transmit the true utterances of an Irish orator, he must be followed by a faithful short-hand reporter.
